Achievement and Inclusion in Schools

When critics were not introducing future filmmakers such as Olivier Assayas or Christophe Gans to Japanese films, they stepped behind the camera themselves, often making films influenced by their Japanese counterparts. Positive psychology finds it very important to study what contributes to people being happy and to people flourishing, and finds it just as important to focus on the constructive ways in which people function and adapt, as opposed to the general field of psychology which focuses more on what goes wrong or is pathological with human beings.
